A GOOD THING

A husband who lives off his wife's folks is not likely to apply for a divorce.

A SWEET HUSBAND

Some of the dentists will tell you that the teeth—or their condition—are related to many ailments with which humanity is afflicted. Men have been told to have their teeth pulled in order to find relief from rheumatism, lumbago, insomnia, nervous prostration, king's evil and bronchitis. The operation was also said to reduce pessimism and acerbity and make the patient more amiable and docile. Bad teeth, pus cavities and pyorrhea were to blame for moroseness, petulance and malignity. All our murderers had bad teeth and it was alleged that crime would be reduced 200 per cent if everybody had the offending molars yanked. On top of this comes the story that a gruff and deep-toned citizen who recently had all his teeth extracted at one swoop is now able to warble to his family in a beautiful tenor voice. What was once a growl has become a flute or birdlike note that comes as grateful music to the listening ear. We heard once of a man who had his teeth filed for bass and now, if he can have them pulled for tenor, the world may yet be able to ring with harmony. If the wife can take her grizzly bear of a husband down to the dentist and have him made over into a Caruso the universe will be sweetened to a remarkable degree.

We see where an Ohio man cut off his wife's thumb. Maybe she kept him under it.

It is only when his wife bakes bread that the average man has a chance to enjoy a good loaf.

The trouble with divorce cases nowadays is you can't tell whether she wants a divorce or a slice of alimony.

We can also recall those happy moments long gone by when we could spend a day in the woods without having to worry about the chigger.
